FROM THE PRESIDENT

NEBCA works so well as an organization only because of the tremendous contributions that so many of our members make to supporting the club and the events that we sponsor, sanction and participate in. The dedication and energy that so many of you bring is really amazing and it does not go unrecognized or unappreciated by your peers. I have been asked several times this summer about whether NEBCA should give some kind of award or special recognition to individuals that contribute in a special way. The club’s board and officers have had some interesting discussions about this and we all agree that it is a great idea. We have so many deserving members who share such a wide array of talents that we think that the best thing we can do is to start to publish a series of articles in the newsletter to highlight some of them.

Maria Amodei has begun the series in this issue with an article recognizing the contributions of the veterinarians who have helped so many of us with our dogs in so many ways. My hope is that readers of this newsletter will think about who they feel is most deserving of similar recognition and contribute articles for future newsletter issues (Clearly, one of our most dedicated volunteers is our hard working newsletter editor. We don’t want to leave this project solely in her hands. Your President gives her enough headaches by continually pushing the deadlines she so patiently offers for his contributions to these pages!)

As this newsletter goes to publication, our Trials Committees are putting the final touches on plans for our two season ending competitions. Both sound like they will be great events. The Novice Finals will be held at Cascade Farm in Bath, New Hampshire on September 10 and 11 and will be judged by Werner Reitboeck from Ontario. The Fall Foliage will be held at the Old Chatham Shepherding Company in Old Chatham, New York on October 14, 15 & 16 and will be judged by Frank Cashen from Ireland. Congratulations to all who have qualified for and will be able to participate in these events. - Chris

THE FAULTY DOG

There are no perfect dogs. You can pretend your dog is perfect or opine about his faults, or... you can work to train your dog to improve those faulty areas and handle your dog to capitalize on the strengths and avoid the weaknesses. This column will describe a faulty dog, and offer suggestions from different people on training exercises to improve the dog and handling methods to get the best work from the dog on the field. The dogs described will all be successful Open dogs (past or present) that have significant faults. The absence of faults does not make a great dog. The presence of remarkable abilities makes a great dog.

Dog #7 – The grip and hold dog. This dog is biddable, good flanks, direct walkup. It is a very keen dog with some tension, sensitive to handler pressure. He does not have a great deal of confidence, but enough to get the job done when coupled with his determination. The dog will grip difficult stock and does take the animal that is resisting rather than an easier target. He often goes to a grip sooner than wanted, but he is seldom a gratuitous gripper (then usually a reaction to handler pressure). The main problem is that though he addresses the problem head on he does not take the nose but rather neck or shoulder, and often holds a few moments creating a damage risk to shorn stock. A grip is needed for some of his farm work.

Barbara Armata's Comments

A dog that grips the neck or shoulder does this because it is hesitating just a bit before gripping. He may also be ducking down under the head of the sheep to avoid direct contact.

Both situations indicate a lack of confidence; however, the dog is in a position to gain ground in that aspect. He is on his way to being brave enough to hit the nose.

Sometimes, at this junction, having a sheep come at the dog and hit him can cause the dog to get angry enough to retaliate and hit the nose. Praising that moment will reinforce it. This can backfire and instead, cause fear. So be sure, you can back up your dog and help him, if need be.

Scotties are great for holding and encouraging the dog to hit the face. Holding the horns usually prevents your hands from getting bit! For many dogs, holding a sheep and asking the dog to grip a nose is all they need. For others, because you are asking them in an excited manner, they think they are doing something wrong by coming in. The solution for these dogs is shedding a single or just working a single sheep that will face the dog. Again, you need to be back up to encourage the dog to face the sheep. Try getting the dog to walk up but not dive in. Stop the dog frequently, asking him to just stand. Sometimes, this is enough to get the sheep to move. If the sheep charges, the dog isn't in forward motion which encourages the grip and hang. Instead, hopefully, the sheep drops its head and the dog will hit the nose.

My Meg was a gripper of the neck. She'd sometimes "fly by" as she gripped....grip and keep going. I didn't reprimand her as I didn't want to take away any confidence, even though the method was incorrect. About the age of seven or eight, she finally gripped a nose and didn't fly by. Surprised the heck out of me and her! As time has gone on, nose grips are more common than the neck grabs. Just goes to show that learning continues no matter what the age!

Laura Vishoot's Comments

For a dog with this fault to make it to successful Open status, it must have a very good handler who can read their dog well and abort this behavior before it takes hold (heh, heh) on the trial field. Otherwise, this could very much hinder the dog from becoming successful in Open.

In my opinion, there is no good purpose for this type of gripping and if it is the main method the dog has for using its bite, I'm not sure how it can really be useful in its everyday farm work. That said, I know that many sheep and cattle people in my area are fine with their dogs biting any way they feel like, as long as it causes the stock to get going. Those folks, though, are not ever taking their dogs to a sheepdog trial. They actually could get their work done without damaging any sheep if they wanted, or had more time to spend on dog training. It's not a priority.

If the person with the dog in this scenario wants the behavior to go away in sheepdog trials, they would need to get rid of it in farm work as well.

I don't know if this can be trained out of a dog that's old enough to have a successful Open career. On the upside, this dog may lack confidence and even be a bit scared of sheep but since it will walk in directly and does nail the difficult sheep rather than an innocent bystander, there is enough to work with. It definitely needs more confidence and to learn other ways to respond to feeling uncomfortable with tough sheep.

First I would work with it in a small square or rectangular area with a lot of sheep that would not challenge the dog, and never allow it to bite. I would have it go around the sheep, get them out of the corners, move them, push them into a corner, whatever I could think of. It seems clear that the dog lacks confidence and may even be a little afraid of sheep so it's important that it can do all this successfully. That means, leave the attack sheep out.

I would also work on its flanks. It is said to have good flanks, but this grip and hold is often part of a big slice so I suspect this dog has certain situations where it doesn't have such clean flanks after all. Sometimes I would have it work a single for a while and see if it can maintain its flanks (and a cool head) in that situation.

If possible, once I trusted that the dog would work in a tight place without gripping (dirty or otherwise), I would have it help me do some tough jobs like move ewes and lambs but with me on the same side as the dog so I could help keep them moving and forestall the unwanted behavior in the dog.

If all this was going well, I would see if I could train a nose (or at least face) bite on command, with a release on command as well.

Visualize everything going wrong, everything. Visualize the dog not stopping, crossing the course, tight flanks, every weakness the dog has. As each of these things goes wrong in your mind, visualize yourself handling them in a calm and practical manner. When you walk to the post you only have control over yourself. Either you have trained the dog sufficiently, or not. Your entire focus should be on handling whatever the run presents you to your best ability. You cannot control the dog. You can only control yourself. – Maria Amodei

SHEEPDOG FITNESS AND INJURY PREVENTION

Judy Coates MSPT, CCRT (Certified Canine Rehabilitation Therapist)

Coates Canine Physical Therapy, 63 Evans Drive, Lebanon, NH, 603 381-2426, jcoates@judycoates.com

As a human orthopedic and sports physical therapist that “went to the dogs”, I can say for certain that dogs respond to physical therapy much faster than humans. This is likely due to the fact that the canine brain is much simpler and that dogs do not get bogged down in the emotional sequelae that counteracts progress. As a canine physical therapist, the satisfaction of improving quality of life through good orthopedic health is positively thrilling.

As athletes, sheepdogs are asked to perform extraordinary acrobatics throughout the course of training and competing. We expect them to stop on a dime, to go from a complete stop to a full run, to crouch and crawl, to twist and turn, to jump over brooks and streams etc. The versatility of their movement requires that they be both nimble and strong. With special efforts to promote joint and muscle mobility combined with adequate strength, we can minimize injury and maximize performance.

How do we do this? Success is based on the optimization of nutrition and fitness throughout the development and training of sports specific skills. Fitness consists of 5 elements: joint range of motion, muscle flexibility, strength (leg strength and core strength), proprioception and endurance (cardiovascular health). We will define and explain the importance of each element as well as recommend an “owner’s routine” to address them.

Joint range of motion refers to the ability of a joint to flex and extend easily through its full motion. If a joint is restricted, the body will compensate (make up for lost motion) at an adjacent joint. This creates abnormal stress and strain at that adjacent joint which can lead to injury.

Flexibility refers to the length of a muscle. Athletic activities require exceptional muscle flexibility. If a muscle is tight, it is predisposed to injury (muscle strain). Additionally a tight muscle can lead to compensatory motion at an adjacent area, resulting in excess stress and strain at that segment.

Strength is the ability of a muscle to produce force. The amount of strength required depends on the demands placed on the muscle during activity. Our canine athletes require greater strength than the non-athletic dog. If a muscle is unable to withstand the demands of an activity, excess force is applied to the tendon rather than the muscle belly. This predisposes the dog a tendonitis or tendinopathy.

Proprioception is the ability to know where a joint is in space without having to look at it. Imagine a dog walking through the rungs of a ladder. He is able to clear the rungs with his hind legs without looking back at them because of normal proprioception. Advanced proprioceptive training is critical for our athletes as they are navigating variable terrain at fast speeds.

Cardiovascular endurance is the ability of the heart, lungs and blood vessels to deliver oxygen to the muscles. This prepares the dog for sports that involve continuous or aerobic activity. The dog’s cardiovascular gait is the trot.

Owner’s Routine

Unlike humans, you get a lot with a little when working with dogs. A 10-15 minute program performed 3-5 times per week is sufficient for reaching and maintaining fitness. This is, of course, in addition to your normal sheepdog training schedule.

Prior to describing a simple routine, it is important to consider a few basic principles.

1. When performing manual (hands-on) techniques, use soft hands. Never force a motion. Listen to what your dog is telling you about any discomfort.

2. Range of motion and stretching techniques should be pain free. If painful, the dog will guard or tighten his muscles. This works against the goal of the exercise.
3. Strengthening needs to be performed with perfect form. We do not want to strengthen in an abnormal posture or position. If your dog cannot maintain good form, the exercise is too difficult and needs to be modified.
4. Strengthening occurs with slow movements. Dogs can compensate for weak muscles when moving faster.
5. Stretching is safest and most effective when it occurs in the belly of the muscle (rather than the tendon).
6. Cardiovascular training needs to be introduced incrementally. Be sure to know the signs of overheating and exhaustion.

Below are examples of exercises that address these 5 elements of fitness.

Joint Range of Motion: (JROM)

Joint ROM should be symmetrical from side to side. If not, seek out an evaluation to identify the specific joint restriction and its cause.

Perform 2 reps, 3 times/wk.

Front limb

Take each joint through its normal range of motion.

- 1) Bend (or flex) the shoulder, elbow, carpus and toes
- 2) Straighten (or extend) the shoulder, elbow, carpus and toes

Elbow Flexion

Shoulder Extension

Hind limb

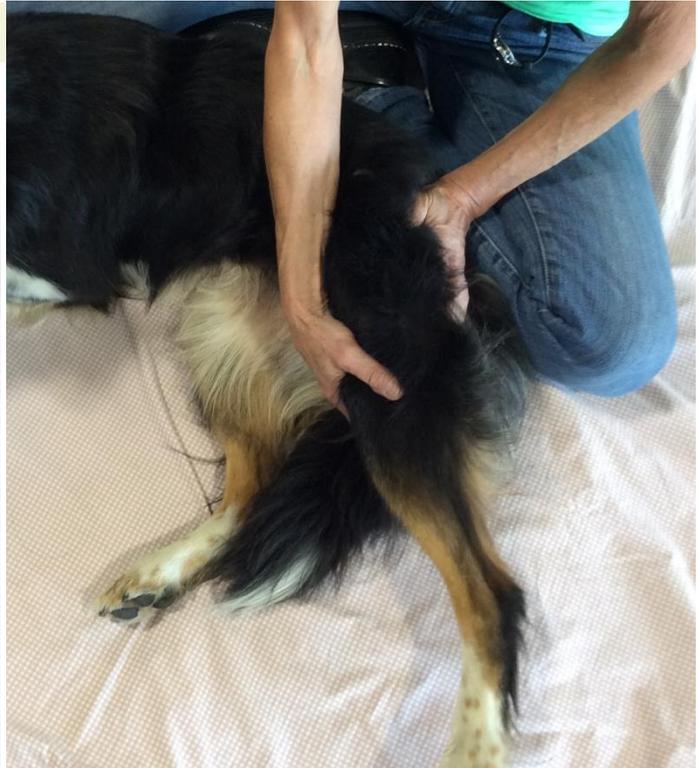

- 1) Bend (or flex) the hip, knee, hock, and toes
- 2) Straighten (or extend) the hip, knee, hock and toes

Hip Extension →

Tarsal Flexion

Neck

- 1) Use a treat or toy to encourage movement of the nose to each shoulder, nose to chest and nose to ceiling

Trunk

- 1) Use a toy or treat to encourage movement of the nose to each hip, nose to stomach, place front legs on an elbow height box and encourage nose towards the ceiling

Flexibility:

Flexibility should be symmetrical side to side. If a muscle is tight, flexibility should improve with gentle stretching. If flexibility does not easily improve, seek out an evaluation to determine the specific muscle that needs attention and the cause of its tightness. The stretch should be moderate (non-painful). Massage the muscle being stretched to assure that the stretch is occurring in the belly of the muscle.

Hold for 15 seconds, 2 reps, 2-4 times/wk

- Front limb Biceps, Triceps
- Hind Limb Psoas, Hamstrings, Sartorius
- Trunk same as range of motion above

Triceps muscle stretch - →
 Extend the shoulder and flex the elbow until muscle tension is noted. Massage (bend) the Triceps muscle belly to assure that the stretch occurs in the belly of the muscle.

← Hamstring muscle stretch
 Flex the hip, then extend the knee until hamstring muscle tension is noted. Massage (bend) the belly of the Hamstring muscle belly to assure that the stretch occurs in the belly of the muscle. This muscle group is often tight in athletic dogs.

Strength

When possible, palpate the target muscle to be assured that it is contracting effectively. These exercises should be performed slowly.

- Front Triceps (pushups), Biceps (downhill walking), Latissimus Dorsi (uphill walking)
- Hind Gluteals and Hamstrings (backward walking up a hill)
- Trunk/Core Abdominals (diagonal leg lifts; sit and beg)

Diagonal Leg Lift →
Simultaneously lift opposite front and hind legs. Hold 10-15 seconds. This is an appropriate exercise if the dog is able to maintain good posture. "Shaking" is fine. It represents a good challenge.

Proprioception

Move a treat to in a variety of positions in order to challenge balance. If the dog loses balance or falls, the exercise is too difficult. Proprioceptive exercises serve 3 purposes: 1) train proprioception, 2) strengthen core, 3) strengthen limbs.

Perform for 20 seconds; 2 reps, 3-4 times/wk

- Fronts on Bosu/Peanut
- Hinds on Bosu
- Hinds and fronts on wobble equipment

- works core and hind end (more than front end)
- works core and front end (more than hind end)
- Advanced core

← Fronts on Bosu

Hinds on Bosu

Fronts on Peanut →

Advanced: Dog walks forward and backward with fronts on peanut.

Fronts and hinds simultaneously on wobble equipment. Progress from elbows bent (left) to elbows straight (right). This dog is a "1st timer". The picture does not illustrate that he is unable to control his hind end. He needs more training at a lower level of difficulty before this exercise is appropriate for him.

Cardiovascular

Trot x 20 min, 3x/wk

Swim x 10 min, 3 x/wk

We share common goals for our canine athletes: maintaining fitness, maximizing performance and minimizing injury. We can make great headway in accomplishing these goals with a home routine that addresses joint range of motion, muscle flexibility, strength and proprioceptive training. If we are attentive to asymmetries from side to side, they can be addressed proactively before the athlete becomes lame.

Be creative and have fun with your routine!

I NEED A VET!

Maria Amodei

I had mismanaged the bottom of the fetch and had the sheep coming to the post faster than ideal. Ideal being a slow walk as the post turn released them towards the exhaust. As the sheep went behind the post I urged Marcus to get around and stop their flight. Another error, urging is never in order for high speed Marcus. 40 feet behind the post was a well mown ditch, very visible but all Marcus and I saw were SHEEP GETTING AWAY. Marcus strapped on his cape and ran like the wind, straight into the ditch. The thud was horrible, then he flipped up and over and plowed into the steep slope behind the ditch. He came up with one front leg held straight off to the side and a piteous yelp. I ran to him from the post and was met by vets coming from the handlers' tent. I followed calm instructions and lifted Marky to carry up the slope to a quiet spot. There we were surrounded by calm, knowledgeable, and caring vets: Sue Schoen; Ginny Prince; Mich Ferraro; and Diana Rosenstein. When Emily Falk heard and came from her camper there was no room around us. Marcus was examined, evaluated, wrapped in an ice wrap that Fiona Robertson appeared with, and given NSAIDs. I had instructions for him during the day and he was checked before I left late that afternoon. The injury was not as bad as initially feared. I was able to stay at the trial and take him to my vet when I got home the next day. Ice, rest and rehab and he was back on the trial field in a few weeks.

The shock and drama of Marcus' accident made the aid of our handler vets starkly precious to me. But there are many times they have generously offered their aid to me and other handlers. How many times have you walked by one of our vets consulting with a concerned handler and dog?

Spot looks a bit sore after a run, should I run him in the second round?

Dot came up on three legs playing last night, but looks fine now. Do you think it is okay to run her?

Nell seems off, just not running right.

Joe just got stung and his nose is swelling.

My pup needs a vitamin B shot for a deficiency. My vet sent some with me but the little bugger squirms like a squirrel. Can you help me?

My vet is recommending (some procedure) for Floss. I'm concerned because...

Whether it is dealing with some immediate concern that came up at the trial, or some lingering problem that you've not been able to get the bottom of, our vets have been available to help. They bring their veterinary expertise enriched by a full understanding of the work these dogs do. They can watch the dog working. They are there at the moment we really need them.

Thank a vet today, both your regular vet and your dog trial friends who lend their expertise and time to help us.

SUGARBUSH GAP LEARNING TRIAL & CLINIC JUN 18-19

Margaret Flanagan

Clinician on June 18th = Barbara Armata

Judge on June 19th Warren Mick

Sara Reiter hosted a clinic/learning trial at her farm in Windsor New York. The clinic was on Saturday with two trials running on Sunday, one in the morning and the other in the afternoon. The course was set up in reverse for the clinic so for those doing the clinic would not have an upper hand on those only doing the trial on Sunday. The weather was sunny and hot. Due to the sheep not holding well with a dog and person, a hold pen with a gate was set up to try out. As the dogs came up to the top of the pen, the sheep were released and the lift then happened. Most of the dogs were a little confused as to this set up, especially when the sheep were stuck on the pen. It was interesting to watch the dogs figure it out though. Barb started us out by setting our dogs up for a run, which ended up showing her and the handlers some holes in training or problem areas. Some of the problems that arose were dogs not stopping at the top, during the fetch or drive, dogs going up the middle of the field on the outrun, and quite a few dogs needed further training on pace. One big take away for quite a few of us was the concept of keeping the dog on contact with the sheep, which in turn better controls the pace of the sheep, and can even slow or stop the sheep. Novice handlers see the sheep running and think they need to stop their dog, when the dogs were on contact with the sheep the pace was more controlled.

It was a challenging field with the pressures from the exhaust and general living areas of the sheep close to the trial field. Another hurdle was that the sheep loved people and the pen. A lot of us got quite a bit of practice getting the sheep off the pen to get the gate open to let them in. Because the sheep were knee knockers, you could not beat them to the gate. Some other problem areas for dogs were slicing flanks; some of the younger dogs needed some training on paying better attention to their handlers. There were a couple of handlers who recently acquired trained dogs and it was interesting to see how they dealt with working with a new handler and some of the problems even a more experienced dog needed help with.

Sunday was the trial with one in the morning and one in the afternoon. Warren was fantastic, and gave us all a lot of trialing tips such as when setting your dog up at the post don't set the dog right next to your leg, set them out a little bit from your side. Keep the dog on contact with the sheep, the importance of getting your sheep back on line for the fetch or the drive, which will result in less points lost, and how to fix the problem of the sheep doing ring around the rosy at the pen. Warren and Roger Millin both did non-compete pro-novice runs and it was as always nice to watch more experienced handlers work their dogs. It was a great learning experience for all, and we novice handlers appreciate the open and more experienced handlers taking the time to do these learning trials and help guide us on this amazing journey with our dogs. A great big thank you to Barbara Armata and Warren Mick for educating us novice handlers more. Also a big thank you for the people who helped with setting and holding sheep for us on both days as hot as it was...Kim Lippolis, Sharon Garland, Linda Clark, and Annie Palmer, and for Sara Reiter for hosting this trial which raised $ 1000.00 that will go towards the Novice Finals this fall.

Feed the best diet you can possibly find and afford. Many would say that they'd go broke if they had to feed that kind of quality to their dogs. If you can't, maybe you have too many dogs. It's as simple as that. - Art Stoller, musher

Commands should sound like great ideas. Not so much our corrections. I work hard at not giving a command with a corrective tone. They should also be calibrated with what we want. If we want a small flank we should ask for a small flank; a big open flank? Ask for a big open flank. The dog's job is to give us what we ask for. It is our job to make sure we ask for what we want. I'm surprised at how many folks use the exact same tone and articulation for a flank regardless of the intent. – Dave Imas

A LONG ROAD

Judy Gambill

I am a novice handler who wanted very much to take the very long road of learning how to train my own dogs and run them in trials. I have been training and trialing off and on for about 12 years. During that time I have run 5 of my own dogs with varying degrees of success. I started with a rescue border collie back in the day when trials were small enough to run all classes both Saturday and Sunday of the same weekend. She and I didn't start until she was 4 years old, but surprisingly, managed to make a respectable job of things on the trial field consistently landing in the top 10 and most often in the top 3. She was not a greatly talented dog, but she and I developed a strong, trusting relationship. I knew she wouldn't lie down and she knew I wouldn't ask her to do something she couldn't. The lack of a lie down was a particular source of great frustration because in all other things she was quite cooperative. After much cardiovascular work on my part, running up and down fields for months, we ended up compromising on a stop which meant she did just that – stopped all forward movement but remained standing. We got along much better after that. Now for her part, she trusted that what I asked her to do, she could do. So when she was 8 years old and her hips began causing her to be unable to catch fleeing sheep, I left the post to help her. We quietly caught the sheep up against a fence, walked them calmly to the exhaust together and retired from trialing.

In the ensuing years I have had some very good luck. I have met some wonderful trainers who understood the draw and excitement of learning how to train my own dog. They have been patient enough to advise me along the way and never felt the need to try to talk me out of my commitment to this long road. I have met wonderful people when trialing who have become good friends and who have also supported me through the thick and thin of this trek.

I have also had some very bad luck losing one dog to epilepsy and another to a back issue resulting in paralysis.

My current trial dog is teaching me MUCH. I'm sure she is teaching me more than I am able to teach her. She is a very talented dog with a superb desire to work. She hasn't always been a willing partner. Recognizing that I was often slow to learn, she had to learn patience in waiting for me to catch up. Discerning that she had a determination to work that I had not seen before, I had to learn to be the trainer that she needed. Now that she is two and a half, we are becoming a team.

If you, like I, have decided to take the long road, don't give up. The journey is worth all the effort. When you have one of those runs where everything comes together and you are working as a team; working together to accomplish the same goal of controlling and moving the sheep; where the dog understands the job and can take the initiative to cover escaping sheep before you can utter a sound; then you will comprehend the mystery, majesty and magical quality that occurs when your border collie allows you to become her partner and you will join the illustrious travelers who have gone before you on the long road.

I feel sorry for people who don't have dogs. I hear they have to pick up food they drop on the floor.

TRUST YOUR DOG

Maria Amodei

Rhyme, self-appointed royalty, was an opinionated creature to train. Certain commands were deemed irrelevant to her rarified consciousness. Commands like "Lie Down". She'd come around the top on a lovely cast, turn in, and drive into the sheep and catch one. I would go up the middle and push her back over and over and over and over. I grew tired of constantly reprimanding her, struggling to keep the annoyance from my attitude. I knew that to some degree the constant corrections added energy to the situation. One day on a large open field with a group of ram lambs I decided to trust her, stop the nagging, just turn around and let her bring the sheep along with me. I started with a small gather. As she brought the sheep to me I turned around and started walking. No nagging, pushing on her, nothing. It was working! I walked briskly along, hearing the quiet patter of the group of sheep just a short distance behind me. Rhyme always had lovely balance and never was one to let any of her charges wander off. I relaxed. This was the secret. I'd been sustaining her bad behavior with the energy of my constant corrections. Hallelujah! I walked about 50 yards, the little group of ram lambs trip trapping along behind me.

Not wanting to tempt fate, I turned around to stop her. I was not so naive as to believe she'd stop with my back turned. There was the little group of ram lambs about 10 feet behind me, walking along, glancing back at the one poor sod whom Rhyme had caught. She must have gotten him right as I turned my back. These were Churros with long draping fleeces. She had a huge swath of fleece from the britches of this poor lamb and was using it like a rope to haul him backwards. Her feet were spread and dug in, muscled bulged on her fit little body. She was working like a champion tug of war contestant. Inch by inch she pulled this poor lamb backwards. The only part of him making forward progress were his eyes, bugging out of his head. The rest of the group was showing the classic ovine survival response. "She's got Joey. Just keep moving. Poor Joey, but it's not my turn to be eaten today."

It was a long time before I turned my back on Rhyme again.

CONVERSATIONS

Candy Kennedy

After reading some dog forums I often wonder if some people know the difference between conversations and lectures? It's funny how some people you enjoy getting together with to share ideas and others you find yourself tuning out. Good conversations get your creative juices flowing. To me, "to converse" implies a two way street – lectures tend to be a one way street ("my way or the highway"). Of course, you can and do learn from a lecture (depending on how it's given) but I believe conversation encourages interactions ... and when that occurs there is more involvement from both parties.

So, you ask – am I writing about people or dogs ... or ... what does this have to do with dogs!

I try to have conversations with my dogs not just lecture them. Conversations imply listening as well as talking. It's more difficult since your dog doesn't speak in the same language as you do – but truly he's communicating volumes if you learn to watch and listen.

If you are spending your entire training time fighting with you dog – then you aren't listening.

If you're dog isn't understanding what you are teaching – then you aren't communicating.

True, some dogs don't care to listen and some can't truly retain what they learn – but, you will never know if that's the case if you don't try and understand what and why he's doing certain things. If I'm having issues with a particular dog I try to figure out a common denominator. Below are some conversations I've had through the years with dogs (because I listened).

I've had issues with dogs that were great on some days and then fell apart the next. So, I spend time trying to understand what was different on those days. For one dog – if the first work of the day went well then he was good the rest of the working session. If he did something wrong (first outrun, lift, etc.) he became so stressed the rest of the work session went badly. So, I changed my training schedule with that dog. If the first outrun went badly, I would just stop working. I usually tied him up and went and did chores or worked another dog. Then when I took him back out I made SURE the first thing he did went correctly. Slowly, he stopped getting so stressed that it was impossible for him to focus if he did one thing wrong.

I had one dog recently that started slicing on his flanks. He had always been a clean, cool flanker and all the sudden he became the opposite of what was natural in him. Instead of just pushing him out – I tried to figure out what had changed in our working routine. Finally came to the conclusion that it was shedding. He LOVED shedding and every time the sheep came near me he wanted to engage which tightened down his flanks. So, we worked on flanks up close – pushing him past the sheep in both directions. I hadn't done a good job of having him understand my body position in relationship to shedding. I try to give clear signals to my dogs when I shed and he just hadn't understood the language yet.

I've had dogs that would fight every time we went to work. So, I would work them up close to make sure they didn't win the fight but at the same time letting them work sheep. Trying to let them understand that we were a team and this wasn't a competition. It's not a matter of breaking a dog but making it so enjoyable for him to interact with you, that he looks forward to it.

I've had dogs that became so reactionary they couldn't think. I went back several steps in their training and concluded it was my whistle that set them off. So, I decided to go back to voice. Then I slowly added one whistle at a time and I changed the whistle to softer, lower tones. I could have concluded he was being a jerk and fought him every step of the way – but we would have spent all our working time fighting instead of learning.

I've gotten into training ruts and never varied the routine – I would have never noticed – if I hadn't paid attention to my dogs getting bored. Again, the dogs were telling me what I was doing wrong ... it just took me awhile to "listen loudly".

Dogs are different, sheep are different – so learn to listen with your eyes and all species will be better off.

Note: Not all breeders listed here are necessarily handlers

This listing of Border Collie breeders is for informational purposes only and in no way represents an endorsement of these breeders by the Northeast Border Collie Association. When making enquiries into purchasing a pup, NEBCA strongly recommends selecting from sound, proven, working stock. We suggest you see both parents work. If you are not able to see the parents working at the farm, do attend the trials and see them working there. Watch for trial results and seek the advice of experienced handlers.
